

GOVERNANCE

The University is governed by a Senate of 35 members representing University and community interests. Senate is led by a Chancellor and Deputy Chancellor, elected from within its ranks.

The Vice-Chancellor is our chief executive officer. Senate relies heavily on the Vice-Chancellor for advice on all matters of policy.

The Senior Deputy Vice-Chancellor, the Deputy Vice-Chancellor (Research) and the Secretary and Registrar assist the Vice-Chancellor. The Senior Deputy Vice-Chancellor is responsible for administration of academic departments and staff; the Deputy Vice-Chancellor (Research) is responsible for research policy development; and the Secretary and Registrar is the principal professional administrator reporting to the Vice-Chancellor, with wide responsibilities for administrative services.

A Pro-Vice-Chancellor (Academic) is responsible to the Vice-Chancellor for matters including strategic planning, development of the Ipswich campus and external affairs.

Subject to the University of Queensland Act 1965 (under which this Senate was constituted in 1996) and Statutes, Senate had authority to appoint and dismiss all academic staff (deans, professors, readers, lecturers, examiners) and other officers of the University. Other specific powers and responsibilities included:

- appointing vice-chancellors and senior deputy vice-chancellors;
- establishing and abolishing faculties, departments and other academic units;
- conferring honorary degrees;
- adopting the annual budget and controlling expenditure;
- establishing and managing investment funds; and
- making Statutes and Rules.

The Academic Board is our senior academic advisory body. Members include senior University officers, executive deans, pro-vice-chancellors, heads of schools, heads of departments and some service units, elected members, the president of the University of Queensland Union and five other student representatives. The Board formulates policy on matters such as new courses, teaching, learning and assessment, research, promotions, special studies programs, prizes and scholarships.
